

The project attempts to extend the wood-wood work that already characterizes the original construction where the overlap between systems (tread-strap-sheet) creates an intricate texture of wooden slats of different dimensions. The new beams, closed boxes and skylights will follow the same nature of wood-wood overlap as if the same constructive system that configured the roof were extended to also solve the new needs of the building.

